Librex Newsletter - October 2014

Hi Marc-Andre,

Here's the October edition of our Librex Newsletter, which has the goal of keeping you informed about various Librex best practices and presenting you some of our new features.

On-Demand OCR And Barcode Extraction

Since version 4.1 of Librex, a new tool is available in the Librex scanning and importation windows. This tool enables the user to launch text (OCR) and barcode extraction in real time.

The Librex administrator has often previously configured extraction automatisms to automatically read data on the image without having the user trigger it.

But it can happen that no automatisms were configured and that the user still wishes to extract data and assign its value to a property. This new tools fills this requirement, allowing the user to manually select a text or barcode zone and assign the extracted value to one of the document's properties.

This new tool is especially useful for unstructured documents for which automatic extraction of the data is more complex to configure and less precise.

Try New Things...

We now offer you the possibility to get a free trial of any type of Librex license.

This is available for all licenses, including our smart connectors (SharePoint, Alfresco...) and the OmniPage optical character recognition tool.

Generally, we offer a 10 days trial license, but it's also possible to have a longer trial for special situations.

To proceed, you just have to order the desired license following the standard procedure in the licenses section of the administration window. When sending us your activation request, simply specify that it's for a trial license and we'll send you the relevant activation key.

After applying your license, you'll be able to see the expiration date of your trial license.
